Summary

Guests are looking for personalized experiences during their stay

Modern travelers increasingly seek unique experiences and personalization, prioritizing tailored stays over generic options. Guests value curated activities, local cultural connections, and bespoke offerings, with 61%* willing to spend more on personalized travel. This shift presents hotels with a key opportunity to enhance satisfaction and loyalty.

In the past, providing quality accommodation was enough for hotels to succeed. However, staying relevant today requires going beyond simply selling rooms — hotels must sell the experience of the destination.

Brands that embrace experiential hospitality see higher guest satisfaction, increased revenue per room, and longer stays, all driving growth and profitability.

Hotel owners and managers face a pivotal decision: adapt to the evolving demands of modern travelers by offering experiential hospitality or risk blending into the sea of anonymous listings on online travel platforms like Booking.com.
